Dear Colleagues,

It is our pleasure to welcome you to the 2022 Annual Meeting of the American Society of International Law. We feel so fortunate that this year marks the first in-person annual meeting since 2019 before the pandemic started. In many ways, our program is a reflection of the uniqueness of this time.

As we emerged from some of the most isolating years in our memories, we wanted to design a conference that met the urgent need for connection, explored the real-world impact of international law, and reflected the hybridity of our current world. For that reason, in developing our theme, we wanted to ground the conference by focusing on how international law is experienced by real people, either individually or collectively in communities or businesses. We believe that this is a moment when we need to take stock of international law's on-the-ground benefits and limitations. To answer those who might just be wondering "what is the relevance of international law for me?"

This focus is particularly significant today when the daily lives of most of the world's people have been upended and recalibrated by a global pandemic, massive economic losses, climate challenges, and persistent racial injustice. In this time of crisis convergence, the Society's Annual Meeting is a call to examine the ways that international law meets or fails people's expectations and to explore ideas of how international law can better address these and other challenges.

In order to tackle such vital questions, we knew that we needed to break down the barriers that often separate the various fields of international law. To forge connection and synergies among us, instead of the subject matter tracks of the past, we designed cross-cutting thematic tracks, asking our members to explore how the most pressing issues of our time are confronted across subject matters. We wanted to invite dialogue, collaboration, and innovation outside of the silos that often characterize legal practice and scholarship in international law.

But the ASIL Annual Meeting is not just a crucial forum to learn and exchange ideas about international law. It is also a cherished setting for reconnecting with old friends and meeting new colleagues. We wanted to create space for that too. For those attending in-person, you will find that we have built in time and found space to facilitate that connection. For those joining us online, you will have the chance to connect with people from across the world and feel present even if you cannot physically be with us.

As we spend the next few days together, either online or in-person, we hope that you will be able to make what seemed distant feel closer, and to start to envision the solutions that are needed in our new hybrid reality. As the world reopens and we begin to reconnect in person, we hope this time together inspires new collaborations, a renewed sense of purpose to our work, and, mostly importantly, hope.

Thank you for joining us.

Dear Colleagues,

It is a special pleasure to welcome you to this 116th Annual Meeting of the American Society of International Law. For those joining us in person, this will be our first opportunity to be together since 2019, and we have been looking forward to this moment. We also welcome those attending virtually from around the world. Although we wish you could be with us in person, we have designed the virtual option to give you real time access to as much of the Annual Meeting as possible.

Whether attending in person or virtually, you will have the opportunity to engage over the next several days with a remarkable array of thought leaders in international law and related disciplines. The program features more than 150 speakers, 40 substantive sessions, and six cross-cutting thematic tracks, as well as Interest Group business meetings and mentoring and professional development activities designed for both in-person and virtual attendees.

The 2022 Annual Meeting theme, Personalizing International Law, seeks to emphasize the human dimension of international law. The sessions will examine the real-world consequences of the decisions made by state and non-state actors alike as they grapple with the pandemic, climate change, racial and economic injustice, the erosion of the rule of law, rising authoritarianism, and much else. We will be devoting particular attention to the ongoing crisis in Ukraine, which will be the focus of several sessions.

Here are a few of the other Annual Meeting highlights you will not want to miss:

Wednesday

The 24th Annual Grotius Lecture will be delivered by Judge Hilary Charlesworth of the International Court of Justice. Her theme is “The Art of International Law,” and the response will be given by our Distinguished Discussant, Karima Bennoune (ASIL Academic Partner University of Michigan Law School). The formal program will be followed by the Grotius Reception, sponsored by the American University Washington College of Law. Weather permitting, this and our other main receptions will take place outdoors in Heights Courtyard.

Thursday

The Manley O. Hudson Medal Luncheon will honor ASIL Past President Lori Fisler Damrosch (ASIL Academic Partner Columbia Law School). The program will include a discussion between Professor Damrosch and ASIL Past President José Alvarez (ASIL Academic Partner NYU Law School). Please note that advance tickets are required.

We invite all attendees to participate in the Society's annual Assembly, the centerpiece of the Annual Meeting, at which we inaugurate our incoming leaders, confer the honors and awards of the Society, recognize new Emeritus Members, and commemorate the members we have lost over the past year. The Assembly Keynote will feature a presidential conversation with Amal Clooney (Clooney Foundation for Justice) and 2021 Nobel Peace Prize Laureate Maria Ressa (Rappler). Following the Assembly, we invite all attendees to join us, incoming President Gregory Shaffer, and our honorees at the President's Gala Reception, sponsored by ASIL Law Firm Partner Debevoise & Plimpton LLP.

Friday

The Women in International Law Interest Group will host the WILIG Reception, at which they will present the 2022 Prominent Woman in International Law Award to the former Prosecutor of the International Criminal Court, Fatou Bensouda. Please note that advance tickets are required.

The Seventh Annual Detlev F. Vagts Roundtable on Transnational Law will consider "Transnational Regulation of the Platform Economy." The convener will be Professor Rebecca Hamilton (ASIL Academic Partner American University Washington College of Law).

The Goler T. Butcher Medal Lecture, sponsored by ASIL Academic Partner Case Western Reserve University School of Law, will be delivered by the 2022 recipient of the Goler T. Butcher Medal, former International Criminal Court President Chile Eboe-Osuji. He will address "The Accountability of Sovereign Power for International Crimes."

The 2022 Charles N. Brower Lecture on International Dispute Resolution will be delivered by Judith Gill (Twenty Essex). Her topic is "The Arbitrator Role: Reflections of a Poacher Turned Gamekeeper."

We are privileged to welcome the U.S. Deputy Secretary of State, Hon. Wendy R. Sherman, to deliver the Friday evening keynote. Following the program, we invite all attendees to join us for the traditional Members' Reception.

Saturday

The Closing Plenary will feature a roundtable discussion, sponsored by the T.M.C. Asser Institute for International and European Law and the Municipality of The Hague, titled, "International Law Needs People: Humanitarian arms control and the peace movement." Following the discussion, we invite you to join us for the Closing Reception sponsored by the Municipality of The Hague.

We would like to express our deep appreciation to the Annual Meeting Committee, led by co-chairs Rachel López, Kish Parella, and Patrick Pearsall; to our speakers, sponsors, partners and exhibitors; to our technology partner, Silo Virtual Event Solutions; and to our event planner, Eden Capuano, and her team at Voila! Inc..

The pandemic has been especially hard on hospitality workers, and we would like to thank the staff at the Washington Hilton, without whom it would not have been possible to hold this meeting. Please take the opportunity to thank them. In addition, please consider expressing your support for them as suggested on page 16.

Finally, we thank the leaders and staff of the Society, who have devoted countless hours to creating this experience.

Best wishes for an enjoyable and rewarding meeting.

A MESSAGE OF APPRECIATION TO THE WORKERS AT THE WASHINGTON HILTON

April 6, 2022

Dear ASIL Annual Meeting Attendee:

The COVID-19 pandemic has been especially hard on hospitality workers, and we would like to thank the staff at the Washington Hilton who make it possible for us to enjoy a clean, safe, and comfortable environment. We have asked the Hilton to provide daily room service for all Annual Meeting registrants unless the guest declines.

We encourage you to show your appreciation for their efforts by tipping your room cleaning staff. The recommended gratuity is $5/night, but please feel free to leave whatever you think appropriate.

In addition, the Society has made a charitable contribution to the hardship fund administered by the local hotel workers union. If you would like to make a personal donation, please complete the online form at <https://www.communityservicesagency.org/> and designate your donation for the staff at the Washington Hilton.

Thank you for your consideration.

Sincerely,

Catherine Amirfar

ASIL STUDIES IN INTERNATIONAL LEGAL THEORY

This series raises the level of public and scholarly discussion about the structure and purposes of the world legal order and how best to achieve global justice through law. This series grows out of the International Legal Theory project of the American Society of International Law. The ASIL Studies in International Legal Theory deepen this conversation by publishing scholarly monographs and edited volumes of essays considering subjects in international legal theory.

Conference Information

INSTRUCTIONS FOR IN-PERSON ATTENDEES

Due to the Covid-19 pandemic, we have instituted special procedures to protect in-person attendees. These provisions are described below.

Vaccination Policy

1: Do I need to be vaccinated to attend the ASIL Annual Meeting in person?

Yes. All persons who wish to register for the in-person 2022 ASIL Annual Meeting, including speakers, attendees, exhibitors, staff, guests, and vendors, will be required to provide proof that they are fully vaccinated. You must verify your vaccination status in advance of registration as described below.

2: What does “fully-vaccinated” mean?

Annual Meeting registrants will be required to provide proof that they have received a full course of a World Health Organization (WHO)-approved vaccine plus, if eligible, a booster shot. Such measures must be completed not later than two weeks before the Annual Meeting.

In reaching this decision, we are guided by the best available medical advice regarding the dangers posed by the Omicron variant of Covid-19 and the measures necessary to lessen the likelihood of community spread at the Annual Meeting, as well as the potential for even a vaccinated individual to bring the virus home to family members who may be ineligible for a vaccine or have a pre-existing health condition. We will continue to monitor the CDC guidelines and will inform attendees of any changes to this policy based on public health recommendations.

3: Will I be able to submit proof of vaccination when I arrive at the Annual Meeting?

No. Proof of vaccination must be provided in advance of the meeting as part of the registration process. It will not be possible to register or provide proof of vaccination on-site.

4: If I do not wish to provide proof of vaccination, may I submit a negative test result instead?

No. We cannot accept a negative test result in lieu of proof of vaccination.

5: Can I still participate in the Annual Meeting if I do not provide proof of vaccination?

If you are unable or unwilling to comply with the vaccination policy, we encourage you to register to attend virtually.

6: I have already had Covid-19, and I would like to rely on natural immunity rather than being vaccinated. Is that a viable option?

No. Consistent with CDC guidance, we do not consider “natural immunity” based on prior Covid-19 infection to be the equivalent of vaccination.

Masking Policy

1: Will I need to wear a mask at the in-person meeting?

Our priority remains the health and well-being of our community, and we are continuing to closely monitor changes in regulations issued by public health and other authorities to inform our decisions around the Annual Meeting. On March 1, 2022, the District of Columbia discontinued its indoor mask mandate. In addition, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) currently indicates that the COVID-19 Community Level in the District of Columbia is “low.” The CDC advises individuals in low-risk communities to “wear a mask based on your personal preference, informed by your personal level of risk.” Accordingly, given that all Annual Meeting attendees are required to be fully vaccinated (including with a booster shot if eligible), the Society will allow attendees to wear a mask based on their personal preference and at their discretion. We request that any registrant who, after registering for in-person attendance, develops COVID-19 symptoms, tests positive for COVID-19, or has been in close contact with someone who has tested positive within 14 days preceding the start of the Annual Meeting, switch to virtual attendance. We also strongly encourage attendees to wear a mask if they are immunocompromised or have not yet received a booster due to ineligibility.

2: Will there be masks available at the Annual Meeting

Yes. ASIL will have N95 masks available, free of charge, for any Annual Meeting attendees who wish to have one.

Receptions and Seated Activities

1: What will the seating arrangements be at the Annual Meeting?

Although it will not be possible to maintain full social distancing (i.e., 6 feet apart) at the conference, every effort will be made to maintain the greatest feasible distance between attendees at seated indoor events. For those who wish to maintain greater distance, breakout rooms for substantive Annual Meeting sessions will have designated areas set up to provide additional space between attendees, and we will offer a satellite room for plenary and keynote sessions with three feet between seats.

2: What about receptions and lunches?

All receptions will be held outdoors, weather permitting. Food and beverage stations, reception tables, and seating areas will be arranged to provide as much open space and free air flow as possible. Masks are not required for outdoor receptions, but attendees who are more comfortable wearing a mask are encouraged to do so.

Details about arrangements for the Hudson Medal and WILIG events will be provided to Annual Meeting attendees when available.

Hotel Policies and Local Regulations

1: What Covid-19 precautions has the hotel taken?

We are working closely with the hotel to ensure it is taking all precautions to ensure the safety and comfort of Annual Meeting attendees. All hotel staff directly engaged in supporting the Annual Meeting will be following ASIL guidelines for attendees. The Hotel will be implementing the local health regulations put in place by the District of Columbia in portions of the hotel that are not being used for the ASIL Annual Meeting. These regulations will likely be less stringent than those in place for the Annual Meeting. Attendees should consider what precautions they should take when accessing common areas of the hotel space.

The Washington Hilton recently updated the hotel’s air purification system. The new system utilizes MERV 13 filtration for all air handler units, as recommended by the American Society of Heating, Refrigeration, and Air-Conditioning Engineers (ASHRAE) to help mitigate the transmission of infectious aerosols. The hotel also keeps its outside air dampers open 100% to facilitate air exchange.

2: What are the local regulations regarding Covid-19 in the DC Metropolitan region?

You can find the local regulations governing Covid-19 at the following websites:

- District of Columbia Covid-19 Guidelines
- State of Maryland's Department of Health Covid-19 Guidelines
- Commonwealth of Virginia's Covid-19 Guidelines

Accessibility

1: Will the Annual Meeting be accessible?

The Society strives to ensure that the Annual Meeting is accessible to all attendees. If you need assistance to register or to participate in the 2022 Annual Meeting, please contact services@asil.org.

The Washington Hilton is an ADA-compliant property and individuals staying at the hotel may request specific accommodations from the hotel staff.

All meeting levels of the 2022 Annual Meeting are wheelchair accessible and include direct elevator access. Every breakout room will have designated wheelchair spaces reserved directly off the main aisles with seating for support personnel as well.

If you need support to hear substantive sessions, please contact any member of the ASIL staff to request a hearing assistance device, which is supported by our on-site audio-visual company. If you are bringing your own hearing assistance device, please let us know in advance so we can ensure that our audio-visual services provider is prepared to support your equipment. The Society is unable to provide hearing assistance in spaces that do not have microphones for speakers, such as Interest Group business meetings.

Automated close captioning will be available to virtual participants. For information about how to access this service please contact services@asil.org.

If you have additional requests for accessibility assistance, please contact services@asil.org as soon as you make your plans to attend so that we may work with you in advance to support your participation at the 2022 Annual Meeting.

INSTRUCTIONS FOR VIRTUAL ATTENDEES

1: How will I access the virtual conference platform?

If you are a virtual attendee, you will receive dedicated communications about how to access the 2022 ASIL Annual Meeting virtual platform, including login information, in the week prior to the Annual Meeting.

2: Will there be closed captioning for virtual sessions?

Yes, all virtual programs will include automated closed captioning.

3: What if I have technical issues during the meeting?

If you have any technical questions or difficulties, use the “Help” button on the virtual Annual Meeting page to address the question to the technical staff member who is monitoring the session. The “Help” button can be found on every page of the Virtual Annual Meeting site, and there will be technical staff monitoring the Help channel throughout the Annual Meeting.

4: Are the virtual sessions secure?

Access is restricted to registered attendees. You must use your registered email address and assigned password to enter the site. You are not permitted to share your password with any other individual.

Interference with the Annual Meeting, or with any user, host, or network, whether by sending a virus, overloading, spamming, mail-bombing, or by any other means, is strictly prohibited. Persons who interfere with the Annual Meeting will be removed from the conference immediately and will not be permitted to return.

CODE OF CONDUCT

1: What are the expectations for attendee conduct at the Annual Meeting?

The Annual Meeting of the American Society of International Law is a professional gathering of individuals interested in the study and practice of international law. As a global leader in advancing international law and justice, the Society is committed to ensuring its events promote a diverse, welcoming, and inclusive community that recognizes the inherent dignity and equality of all people.

The American Society of International Law prohibits discrimination, including discrimination based on age, citizenship, color, disability, ethnicity, gender, gender identity or expression, indigenous origin, marital status, nationality, national origin, race, religion, sexual orientation, socioeconomic or veteran status.

All attendees, including speakers, staff, exhibitors, and guests, are expected to conduct themselves with proper decorum and to respect the dignity of their fellow attendees. Disruptive or offensive behavior will not be permitted.

The Society does not tolerate discriminatory conduct or harassment in any form, whether verbal or non-verbal, in person or electronic, including derogatory or offensive language, intimidation, or unwanted physical contact.

2: What should I do if I see or experience discriminatory conduct or harassment?

Allegations of misconduct should be reported to a member of the Society's staff at the registration desk or via email at services@asil.org. The Society reserves the right to take any action it deems appropriate to address violations of these Guidelines, including by reporting the alleged misconduct to the individual's home institution, filing a police report, and removal and debarment from the Annual Meeting.

CONTINUING LEGAL EDUCATION (CLE)

1: Is CLE credit available for meeting sessions?

Yes, a number of the substantive panels at the ASIL Annual Meeting will be accredited for CLE. Sessions that are approved for CLE credit will be designated as such in the final program and in the meeting app. ASIL will obtain accreditation for all of the CLE sessions from California, Pennsylvania, and Virginia. New York attorneys can gain automatic approval for CLE credits from the Annual Meeting through the Approved Jurisdictions policy. Attorneys from states recognizing out-of-state CLE credits in compliance with MCLE standards can obtain reciprocity for credits earned at the Meeting, but each attendee is responsible for obtaining their own certification through their state board. ASIL will not submit on behalf of the attendee. There is a flat $75 fee for CLE registration for the Annual Meeting. You must include the CLE option during your registration to obtain the necessary credentials for CLE tracking.

2: How do I get CLE documentation?

ASIL uses a “Sign in/Sign out” tracking system for reporting CLE requirements. Every session accredited for CLE will have volunteers stationed at the entrance and exits. Individuals wishing to obtain CLE for attending that session MUST give their ASIL Annual Meeting badge number to the volunteer and sign in/sign out. Only individuals who sign in AND sign out of a session will be awarded CLE credit. During the conference, if you realize you forgot to sign in/sign out of a session, you may stop by the ASIL CLE table with a colleague who can verify your attendance and sign in/sign out.

3: Can ASIL still provide me with a Certificate of Attendance if I forgot to sign in/sign out?

No. State CLE reporting regulations prohibit ASIL from changing an attendance record after the event has ended, regardless of whether or not you can provide witnesses to your attendance.

4: Can I receive partial credit?

Credit shall be awarded only for attendance at an entire session. No credit shall be awarded for attending a portion of a session. You must attend all of a single session to receive credit. If you sign out of one session and into another, you cannot receive any CLE credit for either of those sessions.

5: How do I get CLE credit for virtual sessions?

ASIL is offering CLE credit for the live-streamed virtual sessions at the Annual Meeting. As with the in-person version of the meeting, you must register in advance to be eligible for CLE credit. At the end of each session, to document your attendance you will need to click on a button which will be visible on your webpage that says “CLE Documentation” to verify that you were present for the duration of the program. Partial credit will not be given.

6: What should I do if I believe my Certificate of Attendance shows an incorrect CLE credit or contains a typo?

Contact the ASIL via e-mail at cle@asil.org with the following:

1. Your contact information (name, phone, e-mail, and address)
2. The session title
3. What you believe to be incorrect (my name is misspelled, etc.)

Providing ASIL with this information will allow us to respond back to you quickly. Please remember that ASIL may not change any sign in/sign out times after the Meeting has ended.

7: How do I get my CLE certificate of attendance form?

Following the Meeting, ASIL will process all of the attendee records that contain scan in and scan out times for CLE sessions. ASIL will email every individual with a complete CLE record and ask for certain information (state(s) licensed, attorney id numbers, etc.) to be provided in an online survey form. Individuals who respond to that survey will receive their CLE certificate of attendance. Individuals who fail to respond to that survey will NOT receive their CLE certificates.

8: Does my state require me to take continuing legal education courses?

In the United States, the vast majority of states require lawyers to take mandatory continuing legal education (MCLE) courses in order to practice law. Find out about your state’s MCLE requirements on the American Bar Association website http://www.americanbar.org/cle/mandatory_cle.html.

CLE written materials are available at registration upon request, and are included in the meeting app.

Curt Bradley

Thank you, Curt and Larry for your outstanding leadership as Co-Editors in Chief, American Journal of International Law 2018-2022

Larry Helfer

“ Curt Bradley and Larry Helfer did an extraordinary job for the American Journal of International Law, solidifying it as the world’s premier journal in international law, together with its online complement AJIL Unbound. Kudos to them! And thanks for their remarkable service.

- Greg Shaffer

“ Working with Curt and Larry on the AJIL Editorial Board has been a pleasure and a privilege. Their conscientiousness, rigour, warmth, and inclusive leadership – and the way that they have modelled effective collaboration in their own joint editorship – have been instructive, inspirational and impactful. We’ve been lucky to have them.

- Fleur Johns

“ I was elected to the Board of Editors in 2020 during Curtis and Larry’s reign, and immediately started work for the journal. Curtis and Larry were very helpful in helping me settle in the new role with this eminent law journal. They also demonstrated dedication and meticulousness in organising on-line board meetings at some tense moments of this pandemic age. Their calm and proactive approach to the meetings has conveyed an air of normality that is badly needed. Their stewardship has admirably maintained the journal’s prestige in the world of international law and relations.

- Bing Bing Jia

“ Curt and Larry: Editors are unsung heroes. You’ve left the Journal better than you found it, and for that you have the gratitude of us all. Look forward to your return to full time writing!

- Tom Ginsburg

ITA-ASIL Conference: Arbitration in Changed Circumstances

9:00 am - 12:30 pm

Columbia 5-8

Separate registration with the ITA is required.

The world has changed dramatically in recent years, and arbitration is changing with it. On the one hand, the institutions of international arbitration are in flux. Major arbitral institutions are undergoing processes of reform, while novel institutional arrangements are emerging as competitors to arbitration—from mediation to international commercial courts to the proposed multilateral investment court in the context of investor-state dispute settlement. On the other hand, major global upheavals like the COVID-19 pandemic are increasingly leading to demands for flexibility in dispute resolution as circumstances change—under the rubric of doctrines ranging from force majeure to exceptions clauses, to doctrines associated with the measure of damages. Questions have emerged as to how well arbitration has contended with these challenges, both in the context of commercial disputes and investor-state disputes. This conference will examine the changing face of international arbitration in changed circumstances, in comparison to existing and emerging alternatives.

Bias Motivated Violence and Armed Conflict: Ensuring the protection of civilians

12:30 pm – 1:30 pm

Columbia 9-10

Organized and sponsored by the OSCE Office for Democratic Institutions and Human Rights

From internal unrest to armed conflict, manifestations of violence occur in a multiplicity of forms throughout the world. While the exact nature of the violence determines the regulatory legal frameworks that apply, the fact that States remain responsible for protecting civilians remains constant. The escalatory nature of bias motivated violence poses a unique threat to international peace and security. Violence which prevents groups from expressing their identity freely can instill a sense of fear and insecurity among individuals and members of affected communities and, if left unchecked, can undermine the security of societies by creating or exacerbating wider tensions. Effective conflict prevention and resolution must consider the potential severity of bias motivated violence, and commit to addressing it when it arises. This side event will examine States' legal obligations vis-à-vis civilians throughout the conflict cycle. Speakers will address how international human rights law and international humanitarian law respectively and collectively seek to protect civilians, how the 1949 Fourth Geneva Convention is interpreted appropriately to protect civilians in armed conflicts today, the specific impact of violence and conflict on civilian women, and the ways in which governments and militaries are implementing their legal obligations towards civilian protection.

The New State of Emergency: Individuals and international law

2:00 pm – 3:00 pm

Columbia 9-10

Organized by the Japanese Society of International Law

International Law is said to be shifting from a State-centric model to a more individual-oriented one. This shift particularly relates to both the interests to be protected by the law, and the actors involved in the creation and implementation of the law. The significance of, and challenges to, this individual-oriented approach have been already widely discussed in contexts of emergencies such as armed conflicts and internal strife, because the true value of the approach most clearly manifests itself in times of emergency. “The new state of emergency” arising from COVID-19 provides a unique and important context to further examine the issue. This panel considers if, how, and to what extent international law has helped people to get through this time of emergency and proposes the future direction of its development. The questions to be discussed include: how has the development of international human rights law affected the way States address the present crisis?; what roles have non-State actors such as the business played to protect people from human rights risks?; what lessons can we learn from each State’s experience?

Speakers:

- José Alvarez, NYU School of Law
 - Atsuko Kanehara (moderator), Sophia University
 - Kentaro Nishimoto, Tohoku University
 - Anita Ramasastry, University of Washington School of Law

COP27: African Priorities for an African COP (Africa IG Business Meeting)

3:30 pm – 4:30 pm

Virtual Platform

Organized by the Africa Interest Group

COP27 will be the fifth Conference of the Parties of the UNFCCC to be held in Africa. This panel will examine Africa's priorities during COP27. Specifically, the panel will explore how the "polluter pays principle" could be promoted and operationalized in order to ensure that financial resources are allocated to address losses and damage suffered by African countries as a result of climate change. One strategy that African countries might explore, and which the panel could discuss, is the possibility of requiring major carbon-emitting corporations to contribute financial resources to help fund Africa's adaptation and mitigation efforts. The panel would also discuss how developmental priorities in Africa can be reconciled with the need to achieve the target of net-zero emissions.

2022 Grotius Lecture: The Art of International Law

5:00 pm – 6:00pm

Columbia 5-8

Sponsored by American University Washington College of Law

We study international law primarily through its texts – treaties, official documents, judgments and scholarly works – and rarely go beyond this. The point of departure for this lecture is to consider how the visual interacts with international law, both formally and informally. Given the theme of the 2022 Annual Meeting, “Personalizing International Law,” exploring the ways in which individuals experience international law is especially timely. Historian Anne Gulick described international law as both an ‘institutional reality and an imaginative project’ and our visual senses shape both aspects -- institutional and imaginative. Drawing on examples such as the competition to design the Peace Palace in the Hague in 1905-1906 and the use of photographs in international court cases, Judge Hilary Charlesworth will explore how the visual dimension can both shape and transform our ideas of the discipline.

Can Alternative Accountability Mechanisms Provide Effective Human Rights Remedies to Project-Affected Communities?

9:00 am – 10:00 am

CLE Credit Hours: 1.0

Columbia 5-8 / Virtual Platform

Energy and infrastructure projects are the lifeblood of international development. They are essential to deliver on the ambitions of the Sustainable Development Goals and advance human dignity for the most vulnerable. But such projects often have devastating impacts on neighboring individuals and communities—from violations of labor and indigenous rights to forced displacement and environmental harms, among others. Accountability for such harms is a perennial challenge. International tribunals have limited authority over private actors. National courts in host and home countries are frequently inaccessible for reasons legal and practical. To address this lacuna, alternative accountability mechanisms (AAMs) are receiving increasing attention in legal scholarship and practice. AAMs capture a variety of private mechanisms to resolve project-related human rights, environment, and integrity complaints through investigation, mediation, or adjudication. The embrace of AAMs, however, masks a certain nebulosity of aims and potential. AAMs come in myriad shapes and sizes. Their ideal form is uncertain. So too is their ability to deliver meaningful redress with reference to international human rights law. The challenges are as much conceptual as they are practical. This session will seek to wrestle with these challenges to derive practical recommendations for more effective and legitimate AAMs.

The Reformation of International Tax: Competing models and their winners and losers

9:00 am – 10:00 am

CLE Credit Hours: 1.0

Columbia 9-10

Organized by the International Economic Law Interest GroupSponsored by Curtis, Mallet-Prevost, Colt & Mosle LLP

The landscape of international tax is in flux. Changing circumstances (like iterative recessions and pandemics) and dramatic revelations (like the Panama and Pandora papers) have laid bare serious weaknesses in the extant international regime – based largely on bilateral double taxation treaties. Yet we may be witnessing a moment of dramatic change in the regulation of international tax. Many governments are actively considering an array of unilateral, bilateral, and multilateral reforms to international tax disciplines. These range from sector-specific taxation like taxes on digital services, procedural anti-arbitrage mechanisms like the OECD work on base erosion and profit shifting (BEPS), and substantive reforms like an international minimum corporate tax. Although the regulation of international tax represents a pillar of international economic law, it has received far less attention among generalist international lawyers than the regulation of trade, investment, and finance. Yet the world of international tax cuts across all of these fields, interacts with them, and touches upon many of the same tensions: efficiency, fairness, and egalitarian distribution; bilateralism versus multilateralism; sovereignty versus domination; and individualism versus communitarianism – among many other familiar matters. This panel will explore the problems with contemporary international tax governance and think through the trade-offs of the leading alternatives for reform. It will focus in particular on who stands to gain from reform – as between individuals, businesses, states, and/or regions (Global North versus Global South).

Where's the Community? Contours, place, and the role of communities in international law and participatory governance

CLE Credit Hours: 1.0

Columbia 11-12

Community participation has become a common trope in global governance, international agreements and social movements in a range of international law fields, from human rights to international criminal law to cultural heritage to environmental governance. Institutions as diverse as the World Bank, UN human rights bodies, Indigenous peoples' networks and international business associations profess support for very different conceptions of community and participation through a plethora of legal mechanisms, including community consultations and free, prior and informed consultation and consent. And yet the meaning, role and impact of communities in international law remain elusive and underexamined. This panel brings aims to debate and clarify these key issues by bringing together leading voices from different institutional, conceptual, geographical and practical perspectives.

Global Health Law and the Issue of Compliance: What will make the global system work?

10:30 am – 11:30 am

CLE Credit Hours: 1.0

Columbia 5-8 / Virtual Platform

The ongoing COVID-19 pandemic has demonstrated the significant challenges facing the international approach to pandemic preparedness and response. Weaknesses in national preparedness and response systems as well as the lack of well-coordinated international responses contributed to the breadth and depth of this pandemic. We have now clearly realized the absolute necessity of a functioning global system as the lives of individuals around the world depend on it. The International Health Regulations (IHR), first adopted in 1951 by the member states of the World Health Organization (WHO) and revised significantly in 2005, address national capacities, the system of global warning, and coordinated responses. States that do not opt out of the IHR are legally required to align domestic law and policy to achieve the objectives of the IHR. All WHO member states are parties to the IHR. While the IHR stand as a foundation for pandemic preparedness and response, the COVID-19 pandemic has revealed critical areas that were not addressed. These include: the sharing of pathogens and genetic sequence data, access to benefits, and equitable access to vaccines. The member nations of WHO are now considering the need for a new global convention or treaty for pandemic preparedness and response. The IHR carry WHO's clearest legal authority but compliance remains an outstanding and seemingly insurmountable challenge. A recent review of the IHR, assessing the IHR's effectiveness during the COVID-19 pandemic, echoes earlier review recommendations including the observation that an effective approach for compliance is lacking. Reviews stated: "The most important structural shortcoming of the IHR is the lack of enforceable sanctions (2011)" and "the IHR has no teeth (2021)". Compliance with the existing IHR and the new pandemic preparedness and response instrument (however it evolves) is central to the success of the global health system. How can compliance be strengthened, assured, and is that it even possible?

The Inevitability of Migration Externalization?

10:30 am – 11:30 am

CLE Credit Hours: 1.0

Columbia 1-2 / Virtual Platform (Pre-recorded)

Organized by the Migration Law Interest Group

The global north's "north star" with regard to migrants is the externalization of border control – addressing the "migrant problem" by making sure they cannot arrive. States are engaged in processes aimed at containing refugees in the global south, deterring migration through severe treatment of those who do come, and externalizing border control to limit arrivals. This conversation takes stock of global migrant and refugee protection regimes and how migration control has involved ever more draconian mechanisms. It will also consider how such border policies makes international law meaningful – or meaningfully absent – from the lives of people on the move. Should the international migrant and refugee protection regime(s) be recalibrated to reflect these cynical practices into a more realistic understanding of global migration law? Is there still space for legal and advocacy work that can genuinely make the human rights of migrants an individual reality? What lessons should we take from south-south migration trends and innovation, including free movement regimes in Africa and the Americas? How has the COVID-19 pandemic reshaped or exaggerated these dynamics? The discussion will include a participatory segment seeking attendee input on how to address the externalization of border control.

The Climate Change Gap: Inequalities, narratives, and international law

10:30 am – 11:30 am

CLE Credit Hours: 1.0

Columbia 9-10

This session addresses inequalities in the face of climate change from three perspectives. From a geographical perspective, climate change engenders or aggravates inequalities, e.g., because of its impact on small island States and on drought-prone countries in the southern hemisphere. From a temporal perspective, climate change is a challenge for intergenerational justice, and confronts countries with differing degrees of emergency. From the perspective of human condition, it increases poverty and hunger, gender inequality, and the subordination of nature to human activity. The session analyzes these inequalities through a triple spectrum: testimonies, narratives, and international law. The first, factual, spectrum focuses on short video testimonies of individuals who are either victims of climate change, or grass-root activists. Each video addresses a distinct form of inequality. The narratives spectrum seeks to determine what the testimonies reveal on the individuals' perception of the role of international law. It analyzes the objectives pursued with these narratives with their pros and cons. The third spectrum relates the testimonies and narratives to relevant rules of international law: the principle of Common but Differentiated Responsibilities, the respective roles of mitigation and adaptation, human rights and rights of nature, international peace and security, etc.

Collision Course for Sanctions? The expanding dilemma of blocking statutes and retaliation

10:30 am – 11:30 am

CLE Credit Hours: 1.0

Columbia 11-12

The United States and its partners continue to rely on economic sanctions as a key tool of foreign policy, but targeted governments are increasingly deploying so-called blocking statutes to prohibit compliance with those sanctions, putting private actors in an increasingly complex dilemma, forcing them to choose between compliance with sanctions or compliance with local law. While the European Union originated the concept of the blocking statute, China has recently adopted similar legislation and a Russian court decision against Google has suggested that companies could face enormous fines for terminating contracts against Russian sanctions targets. How do private actors navigate these increasingly conflicting sets of laws? Are U.S. and European companies destined for a commercial disadvantage in destinations like Russia and China? Do we expect blocking statutes to be an effective tool against U.S. and European sanctions, or will they merely drive away U.S. and European companies?

Indigenous Languages in Focus: Welcoming the decade of indigenous languages

12:00 pm – 1:00 pm

CLE Credit Hours: 1.0

Columbia 5-8 / Virtual Platform

Indigenous Languages in Focus: Welcoming the decade of indigenous languages (Livestreamed)

The United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples provides that Indigenous peoples have the right to revitalize, use, develop and transmit to future generations their languages. It also calls on states to take effective measures to protect this right. Other international instruments may also support the protection of indigenous languages, including article 27 of the ICCPR, article 15 of the ICESCR and article 27 of the UDHR. However, Indigenous languages are critically threatened, with United Nations estimates suggesting that one indigenous language dies every two weeks. Indeed, despite guarantees in the UNDRIP and related protections in the ICCPR, ICESCR and the UDHR, States continue to engage policies that place less value on the preservation of indigenous languages or even deny the existence of Indigenous Peoples in an effort to assimilate them into a homogenized state. This issue is particularly pressing. Climate change will place increasing pressure on Indigenous languages, as environmental harms affect Indigenous Peoples most severely. Yet, indigenous languages are crucial to community membership and underpin indigenous health, heritage, identity, connection to land and self-determination.

Afghanistan and the Future of International Law

12:00 pm – 1:00 pm

CLE Credit Hours: 1.0

Columbia 9-10

Organized by the Asia-Pacific Interest Group

The U.S. withdrawal from Afghanistan and the Taliban assumption of power in late August 2021 has sent shockwaves throughout the Asia-Pacific region and beyond. The event has been construed by some to signal the end of American nation-building overseas, yet the effects for the region, international relations, and international law may be more complicated than this one-sided reading. Most immediately, the victory of the Taliban regime raises basic human rights questions for the people of Afghanistan including security, subsistence, public health, education, and justice. The World Health Organization has warned that up to a million Afghan children face the danger of starvation this winter. Neighboring states are faced with both refugee inflow and the resumption of trans-border crime syndicates. Further afield, a Taliban-led Afghanistan tilts the ever-fragile U.S.-China relationship towards Chinese approaches of aid and development, as the Chinese Ministry of Foreign Affairs has announced that China will provide aid and investment to the country in the wake of the U.S. withdrawal. For Afghan children, women, and refugees, as well as those with views that differ from the Taliban's, international law questions surrounding the future of Afghanistan could not be more personal. As such, Afghanistan thus is the center of a number of critical questions of international law, including the recognition of states, humanitarian intervention, use of force, human rights and sharia, law and development, corruption, and transitional justice. This roundtable, comprised of experts from government, think tanks, academia, and the Afghan judiciary, will examine these issues from their diverse professional and disciplinary perspectives.

Territory, Tribe, and Trade: The symbiotic relationship between States and individuals in State-State dispute settlement

12:00 pm – 1:00 pm

CLE Credit Hours: 1.0

Columbia 11-12

Sponsored by Curtis, Mallet-Prevost, Colt & Mosle LLP

For centuries, the State has been the central actor in international law. At the core of State relations are territory and trade – and disputes between States over boundaries and cross-border economic activity have produced many of the key public international law principles. But the legal fiction of the State as the central actor of international law obscures the reality that State actions result from individuals and the international rules governing States action in fact govern individuals. This session will examine how State-State disputes over boundaries and trade emerge from the actions of individuals and how their resolution affects individuals on different sides of a boundary, whether it remains fixed or changed. In looking at selected disputes from the prism of the individual actions that cause State-State disputes and how the rules resolving the disputes impacted those individuals, the session will take on the theme of “What about me?” in international law, highlighting not just how individuals experience international law in their daily lives and contribute to its creation, but what elements of their experience do State-State disputes take into account and which are jettisoned or ignored. Examples of the symbiotic relationship between States and individuals include issues the determination of compensation for impacts on livelihood, the displacement of individuals or communities when boundaries are redrawn, and how trade rules can create winners and losers both at home and abroad.

Safeguarding Freedom of the Press: The role of international law

2:00 pm – 3:00 pm
CLE Credit Hours: 1.0
Columbia 5-8 / Virtual Platform
Co-sponsored by the High Level Panel on Media Freedom

Free, independent, and fact-based journalism affords the public one of the best means of discovering and forming an opinion on the ideas and attitudes of their political leaders. It serves as essential protection against abuse of power and misinformation. It enables everyone to participate in the free political debate which is at the very core of the concept of a democratic society. Today, the free press and independent journalists are under attack in many places around the world like never before, as authoritarian regimes make every effort to suppress the free flow of information, so as to control what constitutes the truth. While freedom of expression and freedom of the press are well established rights in national and international law, the reality is that fewer than 1 in 10 people live in a country with a free press, and even some of the most established of democracies have become unsafe places for journalists. If the existing international framework for protection is not working, what more must be done to safeguard and promote media freedom around the world? And what, in particular, is the role of international law in answering this critical question?

Policing Black Women: Challenges and opportunities for international law

2:00 pm – 3:00 pm

CLE Credit Hours: 1.0

Columbia 1-2 / Virtual Platform (pre-recorded)

The conversations concerning policing in Black communities worldwide consistently erase or sideline the lived experiences of Black womxn and girls, as victims and survivors of police brutality and neglect, as advocates for police reform and abolition, and as potential targets for civilian vigilantism and community policing. Women of African descent are disproportionately negatively impacted by assaults on women's rights and assaults on the rights of people of African descent, and policing is often a vehicle for these negative impacts. Foundational work on these issues has been carried out by prominent legal scholars such as Patricia Williams and Dorothy Brown, and in fact, Black women are at the forefront of contemporary human rights movements across the globe. There exists an opportunity for international enforcement bodies to engage and support these women and their activism in a way that leads these enforcement bodies and mechanisms to adapt to contemporary human rights-related realities. Yet, despite their leadership in advocacy, Black women's interests remain underrepresented within national and international legal systems. This session will feature three conversations: The first will focus on the tensions between women's rights advocates seeking to abolish or overhaul policing and those feminists who rely on police for protection in societies where violence against women is otherwise supported by social and community norms. A second conversation will consider the contributions of the Black Lives Matter movement, Womanist theory, Critical Race Theory, and Post-Colonial theory to contemporary global Black women's rights movements. The third conversation will consider whether international law has a role to play in contemporary Black women's rights movements, and if so, how the movements and international law might strengthen and support each other.

The Individual as Protectee of International Humanitarian Law

2:00 pm – 3:00 pm

CLE Credit Hours: 1.0

Columbia 9-10

Are individuals merely beneficiaries of protection that is a by-product of obligations owed between warring parties, or do individuals enjoy legal entitlements deriving from protective norms? And do individuals enjoy IHL protection on an intra-party basis? Both questions focus on the plight of the individual in armed conflict, and the answers hinge on competing notions of the intrinsic nature of IHL. The traditional perspective, that IHL provides only for obligations owed between opposing parties to an armed conflict, precludes both the existence of individual rights in IHL, as well as protection on an intra-party basis. Wide-ranging views on this issue are illustrated by, for example, competing views of Judges Cançado Trindade and Koroma in the Jurisdictional Immunities of the State case (ICJ, 2012); the defense put forward in the ICC case, Prosecutor v. Ntaganda; and the open question as to whether the African Court on Human and Peoples' Rights will interpret at least some IHL instruments as having a human rights character. This panel explores the relevance of IHL for the individual, and the discussion will have relevance both to the protection of individuals under IHL and the structure and functioning of IHL as a regime of international law.

Fractures in the Foundation: Is waging aggressive war still prohibited by international law?

3:30 pm – 4:30 pm

CLE Credit Hours: 1.0

Columbia 5-8 / Virtual Platform

Organized as a Late Breaking Panel

With Russia's invasion of Ukraine, the UN Charter's general prohibition on the use of force is once again under threat. While the Rome Statute has made such acts of aggression criminal, the International Criminal Court (ICC) has yet to prosecute this crime. From the United States' invasion of Iraq to NATO's bombing in Serbia, states have engaged in violence in ways that arguably contravene these foundational rules of international law. In a world with shifting historical alliances and where non-state actors can engage in asymmetrical warfare, the current state and future development of jus ad bellum is in flux. This panel will debate the continuing validity of the general prohibition on the use of force in a world where its bounds are consistently tested, the impact of the UN Charter and other "norms" on state decision-making, and what role the ICC might play in preventing aggressive war in the future.

Challenges to Liberal-Led International Law

CLE Credit Hours: 1.0

Columbia 1-2 / Virtual Platform (pre-recorded)

Today's international legal order and institutions, deeply infused with liberal and neoliberal values, are undergoing what many predict to be a seismic shift. In addition to domestic contestation within democracies, the current international order is being challenged by rising powers, most notably China, who are modifying existing institutional institutions as well as creating new ones that better fit their interests and worldviews. Scholars and policymakers have predicted that these actions will amount to one or more diverging normative visions on how societies should be organized, how power should be allocated, and what constitute the appropriate roles and values of international law. These challenges can be substantively “thick,” gravitating towards particular visions such as non-intervention in states’ domestic affairs, economic-oriented rights, and informal norms of dispute resolution. They can also be “thin,” united by discontent with liberal values without necessarily offering a comprehensive prescription for the alternative. Whether thick or thin, they form a common ground that bring to the fore the value-laden cleavages that have long lurked within international law. Drawing on interdisciplinary expertise, this roundtable explores how these competing visions actively shape the development of international law, norms, and institutional practices. The focus is on both the drawbacks and opportunities of these alternative normative visions. Are the current positive values and achievements of international law under threat, or will new visions also open up promising venues that can further the collective goal of human prosperity?

Climate Change at the Interface of Social Movements & International Law

CLE Credit Hours: 1.0

Columbia 9-10

Organized by the ASIL Climate Change Signature Topic

Climate change is profoundly reshaping our world in deeply differentiated ways. It will have devastating effects for people who are already socially, politically, and economically vulnerable. Increasingly, the voices of these historically excluded groups are seeking to draw from and shape international climate law. Prior to the adoption of the 2015 Paris Agreement, international climate change law reflected a traditional top-down paradigm of international environmental lawmaking. Over the past decade, the field has begun to shift course. The Paris Agreement and Glasgow Climate Pact reflect a new approach that is more flexible, and seeks to take account of the complexity of the climate challenge, and the varying needs, capacities, and potential contributions of different actors. This roundtable will explore how non-state actors, including social movements, are dynamically interacting with international climate law. This is occurring through a multitude of approaches, from domestic climate litigation considering the relevance of the Paris Agreement temperature goals, to protests and campaigns by Indigenous and youth social movements, to the development of new international law concepts, such as ecocide. These actors and movements have the potential to advance global ambition, and further our understanding of how international climate law affects multiple actors and stakeholders.

Queering Atrocity Prevention

3:30 pm – 4:30 pm

CLE Credit Hours: 1.0

Columbia 11-12

Organized by Protection Approaches

The queer experience of genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes is not new. From the Holocaust to the anti-gay purges in Chechnya, LGBTQI communities have been deliberately targeted by widespread, systematic campaigns that can be described as atrocity crimes. The (re)imposition or intensification of heteronormative, patriarchal power structures through legislation and culture come before regimes of widespread human rights violations. At the same time, prevailing heteronormative approaches to reducing conflict and instability, and in preventing atrocity crimes – even when LGBTQI communities are themselves at risk – continues to leave LGBTQI people excluded from human rights and violence prevention architecture. This roundtable will discuss the challenges facing the efforts to prevent mass atrocities while including communities often at the greatest risk, including whether the tools, approaches, and policies are fit for purpose. Speakers will address the provisional findings of Protection Approaches' new paper 'Queering Atrocity Prevention' and ask questions of what it means to address the existing blind spots in the field and identify ways to recognize the importance of centering the individual in atrocity prevention, mitigation, and recovery.

Can You Hear Me? Speech and power in the global digital town square

9:00 am – 10:00 am

CLE Credit Hours: 1.0

Columbia 5-8 / Virtual Platform

With the modern marketplace of ideas and discourse increasingly centered online on digital platforms, cutting across territorial borders and communities, international law scholars and practitioners are grappling with challenging questions of who gets to speak, who gets heard, and perhaps most importantly, who gets to decide or to influence the answer to such questions. A critical confrontation of international law in the information age, its impact is felt at the individual, community and global level in social movements and regulation that requires the participation of governments and private corporations. This will be explored in a cutting-edge roundtable that brings together legal experts from various disciplines, including human rights, technology law and social activism. They will address what the right to free speech means in the digital age; whether there are issues specific to the right being thus exercised that international law does not have ready answers to; and if iterative rules are demanded or are being applied at present, what actors ought to be involved and the power dynamics it occasions. As the paradigm shift in how international law operates in our individual daily life continues to play out, are we prepared, and will we be heard?

A Treaty on Single Use Plastics? Climate change at the intersection of global governance and individual choice

CLE Credit Hours: 1.0

Some 500 billion plastic bottles and 5 trillion plastic bags are used every year with catastrophic consequences on the environment, including the unprecedented pollution of the world's oceans and decline of marine life. At the convergence of climate change, biodiversity, and food security, this crisis must be addressed at multiple levels from global governance to individual consumer choice. This session addresses the growing momentum for adoption of a treaty on single-use plastics, including the potential influence of domestic legislation and grassroots shifts in consumer behavior on the progressive development of international legal norms and institutions regarding climate change.

The Role of Security Council Resolutions in Peacebuilding

9:00 am – 10:00 am

CLE Credit Hours: 1.0

Columbia 9-10

Organized by the International Organizations Interest Group

Under the United Nations Charter, the Security Council is the UN organ with primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security. When conflicts erupt, the Security Council has issued resolutions for ceasefires, peacekeeping operations, and endeavored to create conditions for sustainable peace, as well as including women and underrepresented communities in peace processes. The negotiations regarding the goals and intent of these Security Council Resolutions (SCRs), however, require compromises and concessions, and the implementation and delivery of these resolutions have not always led to the positive outcomes envisioned. Additionally, the goals of States for peacemaking and peacebuilding may also differ from those of affected citizens, communities, and civil society organizations. This panel will look at the intent and effect of SCRs from the beginning of the negotiating process to the long-term impact in conflict-affected communities.

Seventh Annual Detlev F. Vagts Roundtable on Transnational Law: Transnational Regulation of the Platform Economy

Columbia 11-12

This session made possible by a generous contribution from the Vagts Family

The global reach, power, and scale of technology companies has attracted the attention of regulators and scholars alike. To date, governance of this digital world has proceeded in a fragmented fashion across and between jurisdictions. Underlying this fragmentation are different conceptions of what is, and should be, the relationship between regulators, companies, and users of the data-driven digital ecosystem that now permeates the globe. This panel considers Salomé Viljoen's working paper, From Data Privacy to Data Governance: Social claims to social data, in the context of a broader conversation about competing conceptions of governance, and their implications for transnational regulation of our digital world.

Debate: Is global justice (re)turning to restorative approaches? Should it?

10:30 am – 11:30 am

CLE Credit Hours: 1.0

Columbia 5-8 / Virtual Platform

Early global efforts to promote justice for large-scale human rights violations had a significant restorative focus, with truth commissions often being the modality of choice. In particular, the South African Truth and Reconciliation Commission was touted as a model of restorative accountability. Beginning with the establishment of the ad hoc tribunals, however, global justice took a sharp turn toward the punitive. The ICC is premised on the idea that “the most serious crimes of concern to the international community as a whole must not go unpunished.” International human rights courts have struck down amnesties for international crimes, and the United Nations has refused to support amnesty provisions in peace agreements. Civil society organizations have declared that there can be “No Peace Without (criminal) Justice,” and scholars have identified a duty to prosecute serious human rights violations. On this panel, scholars and activists will debate whether the global community is beginning, or should begin, a (re)turn toward restorative approaches to justice for widespread human rights abuses. Evidence of such a return arguably exists, for instance, in the Colombian peace agreement, which makes space for amnesties and community service for certain serious human rights violations, including war crimes, as well as in the ICC’s response to the Colombian efforts.

Close to Home: The role of families in personalizing international law

10:30 am – 11:30 am

CLE Credit Hours: 1.0

Columbia 9-10

This roundtable will address a major, but overlooked, issue pertaining to Personalizing International Law – the role of families. To understand how individuals experience international law in their daily lives, we must examine the role of families in shaping, implementing, and experiencing international law. Indeed, it is in families that human rights take root. Families around the world usually serve as the purveyors and guarantors of human rights for their members, especially children. The right to an “adequate standard of living,” for example, is assured for children by parents who provide sustenance and ensure they have a roof over their heads. International family law straddles both private and public international law. Several international legal instruments require the state to recognize the rights of the family as an entity, as well as the rights of the individual family members. But what happens when parents undermine the human rights of their children or others? What are the state’s obligations in these cases? Under what circumstances should international law prioritize other rights over those of the family? Such dilemmas profoundly affect families, their members, and how international law is experienced by diverse individuals, communities, and societies.

Privatizing International Governance

10:30 am – 11:30 am

CLE Credit Hours: 1.0

Columbia 11-12

The 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development and the UN Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights both encourage engaging business groups as partners in developing global governance agendas. Such multi-stakeholder and public-private partnerships are increasingly common and seen as essential to the future of international business regulation. The participation of affected groups brings expertise, promotes engagement and buy-in, and secures funding. At the same time, critics have raised alarms about industry capture of the UN climate change bodies, global financial governance institutions, and international public health standard-setting efforts. In response, institutions like the World Health Organization and the Food and Agriculture Organization are implementing reforms to prevent mission-distortion by business groups. At a time when multilateral cooperation is at an ebb, public-private partnerships are indispensable, and yet the danger of undue influence is real. The time is therefore ripe to consider how to productively engage business groups in global governance. This roundtable of experts will discuss cutting-edge efforts by international organizations to capture the benefits of business participation while reducing the harms. The roundtable will consider access rules, existing and proposed reforms, and how past experience may offer lessons for future challenges.

Climate Change and Global Migration: Locating international law in the defining crisis of our times

12:00 pm – 1:00 pm

CLE Credit Hours: 1.0

Columbia 5-8 / Virtual Platform

There is no crisis more urgent today to tackle than climate change. It has a devastating impact on millions – floods, forest fires, food insecurity – which is only set to become more pronounced. The impact on the everyday life of individuals is undeniable. A looming problem to grapple with is how international law adapts and interprets the climate crisis in relation to global migration and displacement – within borders, as well as across borders. There are multiple issues that arise from this phenomenon, that we are only just beginning to comprehend. Are norms that have evolved relating to refugee law adequate in encompassing the new patterns of migration that will emerge as a result of climate change, or do we need to bring a new perspective and approach to these issues? How do inhabitants of low-lying island states – that are in danger of complete annihilation – articulate legal claims and remedies? How will climate displacement affect atrocity prevention efforts, given competition and conflict over scarce resources? The impact of these questions on the daily lives of millions makes this a critical discussion, for us and for future generations.

The Digitalization of Human Rights

12:00 pm – 1:00 pm

CLE Credit Hours: 1.0

Columbia 1-2

Sponsored by Jus Mundi

More and more our social interaction occurs in digital space. As the way we interact with each other changes, do the way our rights are expressed and recognized also change? What happens when our technologies continue to change (e.g. transitions to a shared virtual reality/metaverse)? How enforceable are such rights when the technology, platforms, and people that interact through them span multiple international boundaries and legal jurisdictions? What is the role and responsibilities of the digital platforms themselves? This session will explore the migration of human rights into cyberspace and how those rights may change by exploring how each article of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights might be transferred to digital space. There will also be a discussion of whether a coordinated international approach to these issues is preferable and whether such an approach is even plausible.

Uncharted Waters: Legal considerations involving unmanned vessels and autonomy at sea

12:00 pm – 1:00 pm

CLE Credit Hours: 1.0

Columbia 9-10

Organized by the Law of the Sea Interest Group

Unmanned vessels are currently envisioned for use by both the public and private sector, for a variety of military and commercial applications, and the technology is advancing rapidly. However, the existence of unmanned vessels was not explicitly contemplated by international law, including the law of the sea. The International Maritime Organization (IMO) is engaged in ongoing scoping exercises to reach a consensus about how unmanned vessels can comply with international conventions like the Convention on the International Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea (COLREGs), Safety of Life at Sea, and others. This session will focus on how unmanned vessels may or may not comply with these conventions and the law of the sea more broadly, as well as some of the specific rules that may be problematic. Speakers will debate the pros and cons of autonomy at sea, and how it may impact the future of commercial shipping, state relations, and military engagements.

Debate: Trade, International Law, and Workers: Is the system working?

2:00 pm – 3:00 pm

CLE Credit Hours: 1.0

Columbia 5-8 / Virtual Platform

Rising populism is driven by the perception—if not the reality—that there is a disconnect between the ambitions of elites and the concerns of ordinary working people. Key international law doctrines are being challenged in this environment, particularly in the area of international trade. Trade liberalization has been good for consumers, exporters (including farmers), and many multinational corporations, but it has subjected workers to intense wage competition from countries with low wages and questionable human rights records. Is international law, as embodied in the global trading system, a threat to working people? Does it have any relevance at all? Are there situations in which policymakers in the United States should prioritize compliance with international law and norms over policies that benefit its own citizens, particularly the most vulnerable? This session will explore international law's effects on and relevance for workers and farmers. The Trump Administration responded to concerns about the effects of international trade rules on working people by breaking conventions and aggressively pursuing policies intended to rebalance trade. The Biden Administration despite differences in tone and tactics has by and large accepted key tenets of its predecessor's trade policy, seeking to adopt a "worker-focused" trade policy. What is the impact of these developments, and can internationalists offer a compelling critique or push an alternative vision? These topics will be the subject of a debate between leading critics of the international trading system and leading defenders.

NSAGs and Good Governance: Challenges and opportunities for the realization of basic human rights

2:00 pm – 3:00 pm

CLE Credit Hours: 1.0

Columbia 1-2 / Virtual Platform (pre-recorded)

The delivery of traditional public goods by Non-State Armed Groups (NSAGs) is far from unique. For example, following territorial gains in Iraq and Syria, the Islamic State group established courts to determine legal disputes, a bureaucracy that collected taxes and rubbish, and intervened in markets, setting prices for housing rents and medicines. Other examples include the activities of the Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam in Sri Lanka and the Taliban in Afghanistan. The role NSAGs may play in facilitating adequate healthcare has been brought into focus by COVID, with some NSAGs adopting measures to contain the virus, such as screening and lockdowns, and seeking support from governments and aid agencies to access and distribute vaccines. The intersect between NSAGs and the delivery of, for example, healthcare, education, and justice, is far from trivial given the ICRCs estimation that over the past years “tens of millions of people lived in areas controlled by [NSAGs] and thus outside of regular services provided by state-run governance systems”. The panelists will explore the legal and practical challenges and opportunities for the realization of basic human rights, such as access to healthcare, in the context of NSAGs seeking to govern.

Human Rights Law Beyond the State? From state-centric to person-centric global order

2:00 pm – 3:00 pm

CLE Credit Hours: 1.0

Columbia 9-10

The panel will analyze a widely-debated problem of state-centrism of contemporary international law and will consider whether a shift to person-centric global order could offer a viable alternative for a better realization of human rights. From normative and practical perspectives, the panel will discuss whether it is necessary and possible to shift from a state-centric to person-centric global order. Particularly, it will focus on three interrelated themes. First, how can individuals - especially the most vulnerable, underrepresented, and marginalized- fully and meaningfully participate in local and global institutions and practices, including important decision-making and norm-setting processes? Second, how can we acknowledge and institutionalize non-state actors as agents of justice and duty-bearers of human rights? Third, how can we reshape inefficient state-centric, bureaucratic and top-down governance and accountability systems and incorporate alternative bottom-up, inclusive, participatory and person-centric systems to promote human rights in different settings? The panel will also consider how this shift would influence the unique and essential role of the state in realizing human rights. In particular, how the suggested measures would make the state more accountable to persons and at the same time stimulate its' transformation into a human-centric and rights-based political union.

Transnational Discovery of e-Evidence: Is there a best practice?

3:30 pm – 4:30 pm

CLE Credit Hours: 1.0

Columbia 5-8 / Virtual Platform

Organized by the Private International Law Interest GroupSponsored by Curtis, Mallet-Prevost, Colt & Mosle LLP

Increasingly issues arise surrounding transnational access to evidence in electronic formats in dispute resolution proceedings. Currently there is no comprehensive solution to cross-border gathering of electronic stored information and regulations in the area remain a patchwork of divergent instruments. Over the past few years, private practitioners and in-house counsels have had to familiarize themselves with various discovery rules, data privacy laws and data localizations laws to ensure that when they transfer data in manners in compliance with strict requirements on cross-border data transfers. On the other hand, the current private international law framework seems outdated for the rapidly changing transnational e-evidence discovery needs. This rapid response panel addresses issues concerning cross-border conflicts of e-evidence in party-managed processes and whether there is a “best practice” for adjudicators and parties to co-develop such a protocol. This session will facilitate a conversation between panelists and audience members around individual practitioners' experiences in complying with transnational e-discovery rules and tools.

Quake & Shake: International Disaster Law Simulation Exercise

CLE Credit Hours: 1.0

Columbia 1-2

In an area of accelerating climate change and intensifying vulnerability to other hazards, more countries than ever before are requiring international assistance following a disaster, or increasingly commonly, after simultaneous or cascading crises. Governments must accordingly commit to legal preparedness in order to ensure that incoming assistance is effective, appropriate and accountable to the communities it is intended to serve. This session will focus on the role the Guidelines on the Domestic Facilitation and Regulation of International Disaster Assistance (“IDRL Guidelines”), developed by the International Federation of the Red Cross (IFRC), can play in shaping domestic laws and policies to facilitate incoming disaster aid from external parties. After a brief overview of current trends within cross-border disaster response, session participants will engage in a simulation involving a realistic disaster scenario, featuring a fictional country that has experienced a calamitous natural disaster and has requested international assistance. During the exercise, participants will reflect upon regulatory barriers that impede their ability to enter the country and provide assistance, as well as problems relating to aid quality and coordination. The session will conclude with a discussion as to how adherence to international legal norms and domestic legal preparedness for international disaster assistance could have prevented or mitigated the problems encountered and the IDRL Guidelines’ critical role in this regard.

3:30 pm – 4:30 pm

CLE Credit Hours: 1.0

Columbia 11-12 (pre-recorded)

Ms. Gill has provided the following brief description of her lecture:

After more than 30 years enjoying the cut and thrust of acting as counsel, the time came when it felt right to make a permanent move to the other side of the arbitrators’ table. Some four years following the transition, I can now make a more informed reflection on the contrast between the roles of counsel and arbitrator. In some respects, it is entirely as expected – the volatility of the curves plotting my personal levels of stress, exhilaration and despondency, cornerstones of a practice as counsel, predictably levelled off. But what developed instead was a strong sense that we really ought to be able to communicate better about what the Tribunal finds helpful. Or not. Which brings me to this lecture. In a way that I hope is not too self-indulgent, I will take the opportunity to share some thoughts and reflections as an arbitrator, focusing on what I would like to have known when acting as counsel. How can counsel best deploy their persuasive talents in focusing on what will win the case? And what should they absolutely avoid?

International Law and the Corporate Lawyer: Advising clients in times of global change

9:00 am – 10:00 am

CLE Credit Hours: 1.0

Columbia 5-8 / Virtual Platform

Organized by ASIL as a Late Breaking Panel

This panel discussion explores the relevance of international law for corporate compliance, investor relations, and mergers & acquisitions (M&A). It will begin by examining the relationship between international law norms and environmental, social, and governance (ESG) standards that are increasingly demanded of corporations by investors, regulators, consumers, and other stakeholders. Among other topics, panelists will discuss why investors are concerned about international law and how they have engaged with corporations about their concerns; the relevance of international law for the selection of targets and business partners in M&A, as well as the performance of transaction due diligence; the potential impact of the newly proposed European Commission Mandatory Human Rights and Environmental Due Diligence Directive, and advising corporate clients in times of armed conflict. These developments highlight the various challenges that corporate lawyers encounter when advising clients in a rapidly changing world that demands that they consider the social, political, environmental, and ethical implications of corporate conduct.

Realizing Solidarity through International Law

CLE Credit Hours: 1.0

Columbia 1-2 / Virtual Platform (pre-recorded)

The concept of solidarity in international law could be of vital importance in this moment. In an age dominated by regional and global challenges, cross-border solidarity, both at the state and grassroots levels, is critical to addressing many of these threats. But competing international law conceptions of solidarity make its implementation challenging and its relevance to non-state and non-governmental actors, like transnational solidarity movements, unclear. It is necessary, therefore, to reflect on solidarity's place within international law and relationship to popular solidarity efforts on the ground. How does international law conceive of solidarity and what is its role in different fields, like human rights, humanitarian, and environmental law? How do regional arrangements, like the EU and AU, conceptualize solidarity? Are there disconnects and/or unifying themes within these conceptions? How are these often state-centric notions of solidarity relevant to individual actors or groups building solidarity across borders? In what ways are these international law conceptions emancipatory and in what ways are they exclusionary for these movement actors? How do conceptions of solidarity in international law comport and/or conflict with how movement actors conceive of solidarity? How can international law norms on solidarity better support these movements going forward?

Competing for the Spotlight: Law-making for whom?

9:00 am – 10:00 am

CLE Credit Hours: 1.0

Columbia 9-10

Sponsored by Curtis, Mallet-Prevost, Colt & Mosle LLP

For the better half of the 20th century, international law was created by and for states. However, over the last few decades, there has been a notable shift in the work of actors involved in international law-making such as the International Law Commission. Instead of producing legal instruments aimed at assisting states in drafting treaties, these actors increasingly produce statements of principles, guidelines, and conclusions meant for the consumption and use of non-state actors, including international judges and arbitrators, NGOs, corporations, academics, and even domestic judges. What should we make of this shift in international law-making? To what extent is the shift to addressing non-state actors intentional? Substantively and formally, what changes when there is a non-State audience? Furthermore, taking a step back, does this shift tell us something more fundamental about our global legal order? For instance, does it reflect a decreased relevance of the state and state consent in international law-making or rather just a diminishing interest in multilateral treaties? Is this the sign of a more structural shift, from an actor-based order to a value-based one?

Organized by ASIL & the T.M.C. Asser Institute

Sponsored by the Municipality of the Hague

Nuclear war, whether big or small, would have disastrous consequences for humankind. Nuclear arms control is crucial – not least in light of the humanitarian consequences. Given the failure of nuclear weapon states to implement Article VI of the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty (NPT), NGOs and governments of non-nuclear weapon states pushed for the Treaty for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons (TPNW). Civil society has played a decisive role in bringing this treaty about – even though both nuclear weapon states and the majority of related states abstained from the negotiations. While the relationship between the NPT and the TPNW includes complex challenges, the movement is building on efforts by civil society, epistemic communities, and the general public to work towards humanitarian arms control. There is momentum for a new peace movement that challenges government and expert ownership of international law and can build on earlier experiences with Bertha von Suttner and the Hague Peace Conferences at the end of the 19th century, and the American Society of International Law's own roots in the late 19th Century American peace movement. Is there both a need and the opportunity to enhance international law and increase law-making and implementation by leveraging these non-legal actors? Experts from diplomacy, civil society groups, and academia will discuss this challenging topic.
